

You ate the cookies on the couch.
 (I could have loved you more)
 We became "friends with benefits" with a handshake by the school bus door.
 We ate the cookies on the couch.
 (I could not have loved you more)
 Entwined amongst the crumbs your mother never opening the door.
 To this day she remains unaware.
 We ate the cookies on her couch.
 Sweating on her leather chair.

Syntactic Ambiguity

Hotel Lobbies
 Elevators
 Road side stops
 And places that would Make even the most Seasoned whore
 Blush.
 And so she views
 This man with Both fear
 And amazement.
 This one who'd rather
 Read to her,
 Seeking out her heart
 Her passion
 With the spoken word.

Mile Marker 40

Origami Poems
 By Lynnne Gobeille

Origami Books and Poems

Mile Marker 40
 by Lynnne Gobeille
 © 2009

Please recycle to a friend.

www.origamipoems.com
or email us at:
origamipoems@gmail.com

Having been taught
 From the time
 She was very small
 That her body
 Was all she had
 Her legs
 Her best attribute
 She'd learned
 To use them wisely,
 Learned to wrap
 And bend and twist
 To "please" as
 Only a woman can.
 In bed and out
 Back seats
 And floors

Lessons

For D.H.S.

Surfers' skills are tested
 not only in their ability to control their board
 in challenging conditions
 and/or catch
 and ride challenging waves,
 but by their ability to execute various maneuvers.

I googled your name
 just to check it out
 to see if you'd been spared.
 Ten lines down I found you listed there.
 Her simple quote about you stated:
He rides the waves, a magic man
in fact, he's the best surfer
I have ever dated.
 His prowess, however, I am sad to say,
is very overrated.
He thinks it is the size of the wave that matters, forgets about the Mojo in the ocean.
 On Craig's List you got a Two Star rating:
No need for further dating.

Craig's List

I like to check out her site to see what's new
 whose names are posted on it.
 This simple list shows all she's taken.
 Her scores and how she rates them.
 There's Bill and Ted
 And Mike and Jeff
 Jon (no H) and Willy.
 Last week she added Natey,
 using his nick name
 which I found to be quite silly.
 Her scorn and wrath are visible
 a mark of all the hearts she's eaten.